Vaskulas’ ‘Electronic Image’
a video stunner at Wood Street

By Mary Thomas

Steina and Woody Vaskula are masters of electronic art. The artists, based in New Mexico, are known for their stunning works and technical innovations.

You can see for yourself at Wood Street Galleries, where their captivating video installation, “The Electronic Image,” is on view through May 17.

The Vaskulas co-founded New York’s The Kitchen, a theater space for experimental electronic media in 1971.

Steina studied violin and music theory, and her “Borealis” has been aptly compared to a musical composition. She taped nature in the raw, coastal surgeries and simmering volcanic hot spots, in her native Iceland.

These images were manipulated and made into a beautiful 10-minute sound accompanied work that is projected onto five large screens suspended in a dark room.

The characteristic video light component flushes the screens with a supraorganic brilliance.

At one moment, an abstract expressionist panel appears, its colors fluid and vibrant. In the next, the horizon line is turned on end, and waves become silky veils fluttered.

Woody’s “The Brotherhood: Table III” addresses modern warfare and makes for quite a contrast.

Its technology is exposed within the structure of a bomber computer skeleton gleaned from Los Alamos surplus. Five screens are orderly and geometrically arranged within a gray space that suggests the constant twilight and directed intensity inside a military plane.

Here the soundtrack is terse, some of it conversation from a real incident of “friendly fire” during the Persian Gulf War. The tone and the telescoping images that suggest targeting and speed convey the experience without falling into stereotype.

At times more lovely footage contradicts place: a yellow-orange flame contracting like a sun’s aura, a gridded black and white room.

A panel at the side allows the viewer to become co-creator and co-conspirator by pushing pads that alter the computerized piece.

Enter Wood Street Galleries at the corner of Wood Street and Sixth Avenue. An elevator takes you to the galleries on the second and third floors.

“Out on a limb

Also at Wood Street, an audience of about 400 turned out last weekend for Stelarc’s mesmerizing futuristic performance, “Parasite.” The artist’s limbs moved in response to muscle stimulators activated by commands searched for on the Internet.

This happened within a backdrop of technorhythms culled from N+1 sites, body sound amplification and a lush saturation of projected visuals that expanded the work’s aesthetic reach.

It was an experience that would be easily forgotten, conceptually.
HOT TICKET

Elizabeth Pena is among the stars of John Sayles' intriguing "Lone Star," now available on video.

"LONE STAR": Chris Cooper is the hero, a Texas sheriff, in this John Sayles mystery, rich with intrigue, history and interesting characters played by the likes of Matthew McConaughey, Kris Kristofferson and Elizabeth Pena. This film, on our top 10 list for 1996, is new to video. It's rated R.

— Barbara Van Doren

"THE CRUCIBLE": Arthur Miller's parable of McCarthyism is as chilling and relevant as ever, considering that intolerance and malevolence never go out of style. The Point Park College Theater Company effectively communicates the chill of paranoia run rampant. At the Pittsburgh Playhouse through April 20.

— Ron Weilkind

"THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO": Opera Theater of Pittsburgh will present its English-language version of Mozart's immortal comedy at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Byham Theater. Tickets: 456-6666.

— Robert Copan

"GROSSE POINTE BLANK": John Cusack stars as a professional killer trying to come to terms with his past by attending his high school reunion in this dark and very dry comedy. His sister, Joan, plays his ditzy secretary, with Minnie Driver as his lost love and Dan Aykroyd as a fellow hit man.

— Marylynn Umreich

ELECTRONIC ART BY STEINA AND WOODY HAUSSULKA: Installations at Wood Street Galleries combine crashing Icelandic oceans and waterfalls in a five-screen environment on one floor, while a complex media construction lets viewers experience technological warfare on another. The most powerful and brilliant electronic exhibition to be seen here in years. Through May 17.

— Donald Miller